his crimes against the world.

That's the latest suggestion in Washington official circles, in answer to the question every man, woman and child is asking: "What shall we do with Bill Hohenzollern?" It was first advanced by Senator Miles Poindexter, of Washington, in an interview for the Newspaper Enterprise association.

Poindexter, who was pokane lawyer and district judge fore his election to congress, is an authority on international law. Here

"The great powers united for the purpose of defining international law as the code of honor of nations. Certainly the nations which created international laws have the power to enforce them.

"Why should they not now establish an international court, separate from the peace congress or the allied war council, or any organization that force the line back further and often several shifts took one of the reserve positions in the battle area, known as the "Blue line" on Aug. 17. The other battalions of the 117th, all operating under the general direction of Col. Spence, but with the majors in the imnediate command owing to the plan of operations, in the meantime were in the same general sector doing similar duty.

Under heavy shelling the First battallon moved up to the "Blue line" on Aug. 15. Maj. Dyer in this move, took his rolling kitchens along despite the advice of some British officers that the kitchens might cause heavier shelling from the Germans. "However, I thought it was worth while to take ing from the Germans. "However, I thought it was worth while to take a little more risk in order to assure hot food to the men," said Maj. Dyer, "for I knew that if we were attacked the men would be in a better position to put up a good fight if they had been served with hot meals."

Under Fire For Weeks.

While the "Blue line" position was a support line, it was within shelling range: in fact, says Maj. Dyer, the 117th regiment was under shelling all the time from about Aug. I until the October date, when it was retired to the rest area, with the exception of a very few days.

"Occupying the "blue line" position from Aug. 17 to 26, the First battalion moved again to what was known by the British as the "School Camp." which is a title and not a description.

Voormezeele, and Kemmel.

In the meanting, the 120th infantry.

which is a title and not a description.

Voormezeele, and Kemmel.

In the meantime, the 120th infantry had been operating with the British south of Ypres. On Aug. 28, Major Dyer went to the front line trenches then held by the Third battalion of the 120th near Voormezeele, preparatory to relieving this unit with his battalion of the 117th. The battalion was ordered to move on Aug. 31, but these orders were canceled, as the Germans began their withdrawal from that sector, and on Sept. 1. Voormezeele and the famous Kemmel hill were re-occupied, the 119th and 120th regiments of the Thirtieth divisions following, with the British, this German withdrawal and losing some men in the engagements between their vanguards and German rear-guards.

It thus develops from Maj. Dyer's story that the 117th was not engaged in this advance in Belgium, with the exception of small units of the First battalion, which had been sent to the 125th to check supplies, etc. preparatory to the contemplated relief.

JUST ONE VOTE!

Can't you imagine him saying, "Why, dog-bite my hide. I just know I could have gotten two or three more votes, but I thought I was safe and overlooked a few chances. Too late—too late now!"

Still, still, here you are right in the heat of your electioneering days for the grandest office on earth—Financial Independence—and you are casually and incidentally shaking hands with your voters are the stilling them allo on to your rivals! Man alive, the election is almost on you! Cinch that vote—buttonhole every possible prospect—lay with it like grim death! That dollar you waste today may defeat you!

Total Resources, Over.....$2,900,000.00 HAMILTON TRUST & SAVINGS BANK

No other closed automobiles built can give so great measure of long lasting, useful service as the OAK-LAND "Sensible Six" sedan and coupe — these EVERYDAY cars - because no others have all of the practical features which these cars possess. For ultimate economy, as well as for unexcelled performance and comfort, they offer more to careful buyers of passenger vehicles than is securable in other makes. They reach that higher mark of pure usefulness which is so necessary and desirable at this time.
